HOPE

500 years of unfinished business

This project exists as a practice of Indigenous Nihilism; not as belief, not as moral position, but as material clarity. We reject idealism, romanticism, moralism, and nationalism. We refuse hope as ideology. We reject purity as a lie. We reject redemption as a colonial inheritance.

Our grounding is anti-colonial, anti-capitalist, and anti-authoritarian, yet we remain suspicious of every category that claims those words as banners. We interrogate ourselves as much as the world around us.

Our aim is autonomy without domination, existence without coercion, and life without exploitation. Not just for Indigenous peoples, but for the land itself.

We are committed to Indigenous self-determination, not as a moral right, but as the only material condition that can address social collapse, dispossession, and alienation.

We don't seek power. We seek the end of its necessity. We don't seek justice. We seek the exhaustion of the world that demands it.

This is not an ideology.

It is an orientation. A discipline of seeing clearly, without illusions, and acting accordingly.
